Hi Davis. Following up on my voicemails to you--Senator Merkley's office has requested a call on Wednesday or Thursday to discuss 3 topics. Please see the information already provided on those topics, in italics below. Could you do this call, or should I ask if it can wait until Cami's return next week?—Cindy, x. 1815

Operable units: It was actually "early actions" that were used at the Duwamish site, not operable units.

State concurrence: As expected, EPA is keeping the state informed along the way, so there should be no surprises to delay state concurrence on the record of decision.

Resampling: Sampling was done to characterize the site and do the risk assessment. The sampling data was not intended for construction purposes. Parties doing the cleanup will sample and get data before the cleanup design and construction; they will not want to do cleanup where it's not needed. The parties can also do more sampling as part of the cleanup allocation process.
